Jeavestone – The Plastic Landscaper

Jeavestone, the most colourful rock-band in Finland, kicks off the summer 2007 by releasing a single from its second album yet to come later this year. The album "Mind The Soup" was released two years ago, hitting the radio channels all the way to South America, and was praised by reviews. In summer 2006, the band visited Germany and played at legendary Burg Herzberg and Freakshow Artrock festivals. As been gigging for years, Jeavestone is known by its smashing live shows, where this challenging and multidimensional music is performed the most free and dashing way; spiced up with warm situation comedy.

The song "The Plastic Landscaper" follows the guidelines of Mind The Soup by introducing a daring and energetic, but yet more balanced and purposeful band. This time the three personal singing voices have unscrupulously been used and also the instrumental virtuosity has improved remaining its freshness. The song made by the lead singer Jim Goldworth and the bassist Tommy Glorioso combines visions of the two incredible personalities to one entirety.

This single comes with a bonus, which is a music video directed by Mikko Manuel Kamunen for the song called "Snowfall" from "Mind The Soup" -album.
